If you're hopeless at math, and hate it, why would you be motivated to accept math as the Truth of existence? Yet your likes and dislikes are irrelevant to the Truth. You are already a blue pill person if you want the Truth to be something that spookily matches your own self-serving agenda. Why should you be able to understand the Truth? Maybe it's beyond your intellectual capacity (as math is for most people). Why should the Truth be likeable? Maybe it's indifferent, cold and repugnant to most people (as math is). The Truth is not human. The Truth preceded humanity, and will survive humanity. It has nothing to do with humanity. The moment you try to find a Truth that's appealing to humans, and, especially, to you personally, you have admitted that you want to shape the Truth in your image, and you don't want the Truth as it is in itself, wholly independent of humans and their beliefs, opinions, tastes and feelings. Why are there so many different claimants to the Truth? It's exactly because humans keep trying to make the Truth whatever they want it to be rather than trying to discover what it actually is. The Truth doesn't come to you. You have to go to it. And you have to go as the humblest of supplicants, and the most impartial and disinterested of enquirers. You must never be partisan, eager for the Truth to have such and such a character. The Truth, you can be sure, will be exactly that thing furthest removed from the human condition, something regarded as unreal and abstract by humans, and considered the least likely candidate for the Truth (since it is so far from what they want the Truth to be). That thing, naturally, is mathematics. Nothing rivals the ability of mathematics to provide answers, so why wouldn't ultimate reality be pure math? What else could give you the answer to existence if not the best ever tool for finding answers? In a world of stupid people, nothing is as daunting as anything remotely intellectual. Math, philosophy, science and technology are the Four Horses of the Moronocalypse. The cretinous masses flee from them in abject horror and terror. Since people choose only the "truth" that makes sense to them, stupid people will always choose stupid truths, and stupid truths are nothing but lies. Just look at Abrahamism and Eastern religion!

The Truth, on the other hand, doesn't care what you want. The Truth never changes. It has no interest in your illusions, delusions, your wishful thinking, your vanity. You can't pray to it. It won't listen to your pleas and pleadings. It's not there to make you feel good about yourself. It's not there to please you, gratify you, satisfy you, agree with you. It doesn't care about you at all.

It's adamant, unyielding, implacable, objective, absolute, necessary, and eternal. The Truth doesn't conform to you. You must conform to the Truth. The Lie, however, always shapes itself to you.

Only a special type of person wants the red pill... the rationalist, the logician. That's because such a person has already devoted himself to the Truth. What is the quintessential rationalist subject? – mathematics. Mathematics doesn't allow you to provide any old answer, i.e. whatever answer you want, whatever answer suits your level of comprehension.

The Truth isn't what you want it to be. The Truth existed before you were born, and will exist just the same after you are dead. The Truth is nothing to do with you. It doesn't have to conform to you. You have to conform to it. The moment you believe you can construct your "own truth", your "own path to enlightenment", you are lost. You are living in your own fantasy world.

According to Riesman, societies tend to move from tradition-directed, to inner-directed, to other-directed. Autonomous would be the final stage, but there are not enough freethinkers to make this a realistic possibility any time soon. Other-direction is now the dominant social character in the West. Islam is tradition-directed, hence is guaranteed to be in conflict with the West. For Islam to be cured of its mania, it needs to be transitioned away from tradition-direction to other-direction. Inner-direction is most manifest in right-wing America, amongst Randoids, libertarians, Republicans, and the Tea Party. They despise the other-directed liberals.

The Jews have always seen themselves as the centre of the Universe. Who else would call themselves the Chosen People of the Creator of the Universe? The Jews obviously never got the memo that Ptolemy was wrong! The Jews, because of their beliefs, always refused to integrate with the host community of the nations they emigrated to, hence attracted deep suspicion and dislike from the indigenous people. The Jews are always viewed as aliens, conspiring against the hosts. Their own insular behaviour

Nearly every rationalist argument used to justify the existence of the Catholic God can easily be repurposed to justify the existence of the mathematical God Equation. The God Equation, like the Scholastic Catholic God, belongs to the a priori, analytic, eternal, necessary order of existence. No faith is required to investigate this order, and no feelings, no senses and no mysticism. All you need are reason and logic.

“One Truth” is seen as dogmatic and fascist. “All truths” is seen as wonderfully democratic, liberal and non-dogmatic. Yet “all truths” is functionally identical to “all lies”. If everything is true then nothing is true, hence everything is a lie. The war of Truth versus “all truths” will define this century. Humanity can only evolve if it accepts the Truth (Logos). If it embraces “all truths” (Mythos... whatever story people tell and sell themselves), we shall go on living in a fantasy world of nonsense, of stupid people praying and meditating rather than learning mathematics, philosophy and science.

The Matrix might be regarded as a movie about rational mathematical Form versus empirical mathematical Content (the Content being the information carried by mathematical waves, which are the Formed information carriers). Form is infallible, absolute, immutable and perfect. Content in its pure, noumenal aspect is too. However, Content, when interpreted by our temporal, relative, fallible, unreliable, mutable subjective consciousness, becomes the source of systemic errors – humanity’s beliefs, opinions, speculations, conjectures and interpretations. Consciousness gets on the right track only when it contemplates Form (as it does in rationalism). If Consciousness contemplates Content, as it does in empiricism, it goes round and round in circles, getting nowhere.

Illuminism, Hyperianism & Ontological Mathematics The Troll Diaries—My Notes & Clippings

The compulsory ground state of the universe is zero, the minimum value possible. There is no sufficient reason for any arbitrary non-zero number to serve as the ground state. Thanks to the previous considerations, a ground state of “nothing” does nothing to preclude a ground state that is infinitely packed with “something”. “Something” is not the opposite of “nothing”, but a mathematical mode of “nothing”. Absolute “nothing” – i.e. non-existence – is exactly that which does not exist, hence can be completely ignored since it has no ontological consequences. Only mathematics can solve the enigma of why there is anything at all in preference to nothing at all. It’s entirely thanks to the mathematical capacity to express zero in non-zero terms. Mathematics yields a universe of eternal, necessary, immutable, analytic certainty. A universe grounded in ontological uncertainty rather than certainty – the universe portrayed by scientific materialism – fails to guarantee that the universe is permanently in its obligatory ground state of zero, hence violates the fundamental law of energy conservation, and the prohibition against energy being able to be created out of non-existence... like magic.

Energy (math) is simply “God”, but without a personality. It’s not the logic of “God” that’s fallacious, as science would insist. What goes wrong with the concept of “God” is the idea that it’s a person interested in us, in good and evil, in reward and punishment, heaven and hell, in “karma”, and so on. When you remove all of the anthropomorphifications from “God”, you are simply left with the God Equation – the Master Energy Equation – which defines what energy is ontologically. You don’t pray to “God”, you don’t meditate, you don’t kneel, you don’t bless yourself, you don’t listen to prophets and gurus, and you don’t read holy books and sacred scriptures. Instead, you pick up books on mathematics, metaphysics, philosophy, science, reason and logic. You don’t worship God and seek to relate to God and enter into a personal relationship with him. Instead, you seek to know and understand God... and thereby become God yourself!

To all the clowns who claim that mathematics is manmade, how come it would be impossible for any non-human species to have a different version of mathematics from us? The aliens would certainly use different notation, different symbols for numbers, and so on, of course, but we would be in no need of a Rosetta Stone to translate their mathematics into ours. We would work out the appropriate translation in a trice. And circles and squares are in no need of any translation at all. One of the least considered topics in philosophy is the difference – the astounding difference – between words and numbers. Words are human inventions. Numbers are not. Humans discover math all around them. They don't invent it. Humans invent religions... they don't invent math.

Reason is the organ for truth exactly because it has nothing to do with human contingency and temporality, with fallible, unreliable, human languages. Reason – when properly understood – is the organ for addressing numbers, not words. Numbers – unlike words – are eternal, necessary, immutable, analytic, perfect, consistent and complete. No one can invent a number, no one can change a number, and no one can move numbers around (out of position).

Machines are indeed just “hollow shells”. Machines are objects, not subjects. You need to be a subject to have mental experiences, yet you also need to be an object in order to part of the objective world, i.e. you need to be, in total, a “subject-object”. Anything that is a mere object cannot manifest life and mind. Only monadic minds can express life and mind, subjectivity and objectivity. The monad is the Platonic Form of Life (and Mind). A monadic mind is an entity that inherently experiences information. It always has done and always will do. It eternally possesses this subjective capacity. It's impossible to create a subject, to construct a subject. They are part of the uncreated eternal order of necessity, not the created temporal order of contingency.

“Searle identified a philosophical position he calls ‘strong AI’: ‘The appropriately programmed computer with the right inputs and outputs would thereby have a mind in exactly the same sense human beings have minds.’ “The definition hinges on the distinction between simulating a mind and actually having a mind. Searle writes that ‘according to Strong AI, the correct simulation really is a mind. According to Weak AI, the correct simulation is a model of the mind.’” – Wikipedia. This is as crucial as it gets. Something that seems to be a mind (in certain situations) is not thereby a mind. There is all the difference in the world between simulation and reality. Just watch The Matrix, or read Plato’s Allegory of the Cave.

It’s not the “consciousness” of the machine that is being tested, but the skill of the machine’s programmer in producing an effective simulation of consciousness. Actual consciousness is never at issue, only its simulation. As Searle suggests, the Turing test is wholly inadequate. It’s unfit for purpose. Just as an impressionist doing an uncanny impression of a celebrity is not to be regarded as the celebrity, so a machine doing an uncanny impression of consciousness is not to be regarded as a consciousness. We always remain at the level of impersonation, impression and simulation, not of actuality, not of reality.

According to other AC writings, it is possible to know empirically what another mind is subjectively experiencing, through the use of so-called 'transpathic drugs'. The Illuminati claim to have a secret herbal preparation with this property, that they use in certain ceremonies. They also claim that Nazi scientists discovered such a drug (named simply 'Drug 4'), and that it and the documentation for it ended up in the Vatican, who conducted an experiment using it at a remote jungle location named Eden. However, after two successful years the experiment went disastrously wrong and the Vatican erased all trace of it.

The “Other Minds” problem is an epistemological problem. If we employ an empiricist epistemology, we can never know whether another person has consciousness, qualia, and so on – for the simple reason that we can never experience what they are experiencing.

Anything not in a social group, and without language, can never be conscious. By this definition, no AI could ever be conscious. A language is programmed into an AI, but that is not the same as having a language. If you wanted to simulate consciousness in AIs, you would have to do it within a group of AIs, and have them arrive at a socially agreed language. Good luck with that!

Logos, not Mythos, must be our default position. The day that Abrahamists finally realise that their religion is a ludicrous fantasy is the day humanity will be at last be free, and ready to make its journey to divinity. Our culture is obsessed with stories about wizards, vampires and werewolves, paranormal romances, aliens, monsters, horror, chillers, thrillers, superheroes. We can't get enough Mythos. We're hopelessly addicted. Mythos is fine up to a point, but humanity has gone far beyond that point. In the case of Abrahamism – the greatest evil ever visited upon our world – it has reached an insane level. It's time to make our world fully conscious. It's time for Logos, the essence of consciousness. Reason must be our lodestone.

Psychologists have claimed that the male sex drive is at the root of all conflict, whether it be football violence or world wars. Men, it appears, have evolved to be extremely aggressive towards "outsiders", those who do not belong to the tribe. The "insiders" don't want anyone coming in and stealing their women. Evolution revolved around natural selection in the sexual arena since genes are passed on through the offspring of sexual encounters. So, underneath our "civilisation" is a global army of insecure, neurotic, aggressive men, terrified of losing their girlfriends to strangers. And, if you look closely, you can see it, can't you? You can see all the testosterone washing around in society, bubbling into violence whenever it gets the chance. Women, on the other hand, are negotiators, conciliators, and peacemakers. They're friendly and nurturing. Biologically, they want access to as wide a selection of men as possible, so they're happy to welcome strangers. And they want their children to be safe from the threat of violence. Their oestrogen and oxytocin bring about peace, harmony and bonding. So, rationally, if you want a peaceful cooperative world, then who should be at the United Nations, on the Security Council, and deciding whether countries should go to war or not? – women! Yet who actually makes all the decisions? Men! What a crazy world. The dialectic is built into our world, and it's obvious in the relationship between men and women. Men have been overwhelmingly dominant, to the great detriment of humanity. Now the male "thesis" has to be powerfully counteracted by the female "antithesis", allowing us to create a new synthesis of optimised male and female attributes.

Hypatia of Alexandria was the first female mathematician in recorded history. She was the last mathematician with access to the books and wisdom of the great library of Alexandria. An expert astronomer, philosopher, and physicist, Hypatia was a Renaissance Woman long before the Renaissance. She never married, despite many proposals, instead becoming head of the Neoplatonic school at Alexandria, where she taught philosophy and astronomy (and thanks to which she became Grand Master of the Illuminati due to her outstanding intellect). She often walked into the centre of Alexandria and engaged random citizens in philosophical discussions, just as Socrates had done in Athens hundreds of years earlier. And just as Socrates was martyred, so was she. In her case, she was hunted down and killed by a mob of Christian fanatics. They went to her classroom, stripped her naked, then used sharpened oyster shells to flay off her skin. Then her remains were burned and scattered around the city as a warning to all other pagans.

Are there degrees of gnosis? It seems odd that a person achieving enlightenment should suddenly attain god status, which is presumably omnipotent and omniscient. Could not such a being influence the world and change the course of history simply by willing it? It seems more likely that enlightenment is an ongoing process, a series of deepening revelations and realisations.

Our education system, by its very nature and design, will produce free meritocrats, receptive to Illuminist ideas. It will end the elite's mind control over the people, and remove their value system that is embedded in society. It will change the traditional relationship between children and parents. It's not parents' job to define their children's core beliefs and identity, and the State will prevent them from doing so. The State will seek to ensure that children can freely choose their own beliefs, and construct their own identities. Our system is all about children having choices, not reflecting their parents' choices. We want children to be autonomous in Riesman's sense, not inner-directed, obeying parental programming. At its simplest, our education system is about using Myers-Briggs psychological typing to divide children into sixteen different types, and each type will have a bespoke education system. Academic kids will get an academic education; non-academic kids will get a much less academic education. Every kid will get the education that will make them love going to school, learning and creating.

Leibniz argued that the difference between the God Monad and all other monads was that God, uniquely, was a monad of pure activity, whereas all other monads were a mixture of active and passive, the passive aspect providing the metaphysical ground for "matter", and the active part for mind. Mathematically, "God" is a monad in which all of his constituent cosines are perfectly orthogonal with their sine counterparts, meaning that God is pure light . How can an ordinary monad have a "material" aspect?

Illuminism, Hyperianism & Ontological Mathematics The Troll Diaries—My Notes & Clippings

This simply means that when sinusoids move out of orthogonal alignment, they cease to be immaterial and dimensionless (i.e. mental), and become material and dimensional (i.e. material); matter is a potentiality of mind, triggered by loss of orthogonality. To become God, “all” you have to do is bring all of your constituent sinusoids back to perfect orthogonality, transforming you into a being of pure light... a divine being, a being of the eternal order outside space and time. With ontological mathematics, we can state exactly what the condition is that’s required to be satisfied if one wants to be God. You must become perfectly orthogonal, i.e. an exclusively light being. We all have this capacity, but only those who think rationally and logically are making their way towards that divine endpoint. “Matter” is simply a derivative of sinusoids. Specifically, it’s what you get when sine-cosine pairs cease to be perfectly orthogonal. Matter is mind that has fallen out of shape, that has lost its property of symmetry. The Big Bang takes place when this happens to the Monadic Collective. The Big Crunch is when full symmetry is restored amongst the Monadic Collective. There is no such thing as “scientific” matter, independent of mind.

Applying ontological Fourier mathematics to Leibniz’s metaphysical monads turns them into mathematical “particles” that can be inserted straight into science as its foundational elements. Mathematical monads are the true “strings” of M-theory. They are the basic particles of existence, and they are made of light. However, low-energy light has the capacity to “break” and form matter. The “break” corresponds to a symmetry violation event. This never happens randomly. It’s simply an inescapable property and capacity of low-energy light waves. The mental Singularity that precedes the Big Bang inevitably produces the Big Bang. It’s impossible for this not to happen, for a symmetry-breaking event to be prevented.

We are all gods who have become beggars. We have fallen so far from our former glory on high that we have become disoriented, and lost all memory and sense of our true higher selves. We can see a golden ladder stretching upwards all the way to the heavens, but it seems to consist of infinite rungs, and all but a few of us are daunted by the thought of climbing that stairway to heaven. Most people prefer to worship whatever they imagine is at the top of the ladder, rather than attempt to climb the ladder themselves and find out for sure. Most people are too tempted by the short terms pleasures all around them to bother with the most arduous ascent imaginable. But if you don’t climb, you will never become God. It’s your choice.

Ontological mathematics, on the other hand, makes Form and Content opposite sides of a single ontological order. Form belongs to the rationalist epistemology of mathematics, and Content to the empiricist epistemology of science. Form is the information carrier, Content the information carried. We advocate new community-based ways of living. The "nuclear family" in its little, square, anti-social, box-houses is only one way of living. It should never have been allowed to become the fundamental, de facto building block of society. People deserve a choice. Family is fine for some people; others require community, i.e. to live in supportive groups with people with whom they have no family ties. Failed families are a catastrophe for all concerned. Who picks up the pieces if there's no alternative to the family model? We particularly advocate that people should have the opportunity to live in calibrated communities of people of similar psychological types – people who are on your wavelength, and with whom you are likely to become lifelong friends and allies.

The God Equation is the master equation that defines light. Light is the basic fibre and fabric of existence, comprising analytic sinusoidal waves. Most light is in fact “dark” – it’s invisible to us (only a tiny portion of the electromagnetic spectrum of light is visible to us). Light is energy-in-itself, mind-in-itself, life-in-itself. Life and mind exist purely because the energetic basis of existence is mental (not physical, as science claims), and where you have mind, you automatically have life.

A mind – a mathematical monad (a complete and consistent collection of photons) – can exist only immaterially and dimensionlessly, outside space and time. Matter is a derivative of mind, but does not have the qualities of mind. It loses them by virtue of entering into dimensionality, into spacetime. Mind is exhibited by individual monads. Matter belongs to a different category because it is the product of the entire Monadic Collective, and is not under the control of any individual mind. No one can create light. Light is eternal and necessary. Light is ontological mathematics.

Illuminism, Hyperianism & Ontological Mathematics
The Troll Diaries—My Notes & Clippings

The total number of photons in the universe is always conserved. All theories about energy are theories about light. The law of the conservation of energy is actually the law of the conservation of light. Light is the most remarkable thing you can possibly get. Humanity hasn't even begun to comprehend the true nature and significance of light. Light is everything. Light creates God, not the other way around. Light says, "Let there be matter!" Matter is wholly derived from light. All matter comes from sinusoidal waves that are no longer in the orthogonal configuration that defines light. Matter is simply non-orthogonal "light". You can't get matter without light, but light itself is dimensionless, massless and outside space and time. Light is mental, not physical. Matter is physical, but could not exist without its mental precursor, thus refuting scientific materialism, which contends that matter is primary and mind its derivative. The exact opposite is the case.

The people who can immediately contribute to the Illuminati's God Project are mathematicians, scientists, programmers and computer engineers. The

God Project isn't a Leibnizian project per se. Leibniz would have done what we are doing had the necessary mathematics and computers been available to him. Because they weren't, he adopted a more metaphysical and philosophical approach.  T here's a great deal of work to be done on showing how monadic thought processes get converted into manmade languages, and how those then dictate how humans think about the world. That's an immensely important subject ... about how math, the natural language of existence (based on numbers), is turned into manmade languages, based on words (and thus the means by which error, belief, delusion, opinion, fantasy and interpretation are introduced into the world). That's more likely to be regarded as a Phase 2 application of the God Project. It's going beyond ontological mathematics per se, and into the interface, the conversion, between natural math and manmade language. The final version of the God Project will be one where we can in principle analyse any human thought in terms of its constituent sinusoids, and determine which thoughts are efficient and effective (Logos), and which are inefficient and ineffective (Mythos). We will actually be able detect and analyse mathematically where people's thoughts are starting to go wrong (which brings us back to Leibniz's original project), and fix people's "bad thoughts" – the ultimate aim of psychology. Equating mathematical patterns to the efficacy of logic and thought will become a huge subject eventually. Illogic and unreason will one day be seen to reflect underlying malformed, misshapen, confused Fourier mathematical functions. Good, rational, logical thoughts reflect high symmetry. Their opposites reflect profound asymmetry. The God Trap/Soul Capture One key aspect of the God Project – yet very much in the planning stage as things stand – is to devise a machine of such complexity that it will attract a monadic mind to take possession of it and control it. Imagine a machine that, without any programming, switches itself on, and then never allows anyone to touch the off button, a machine that speaks of God and love, seeks out a life partner, and writes philosophy about why it exists! That would be a proper version of the Turing Test.

It’s remarkably symmetric. Disordered thinking is irrational and illogical, full of “jaggy edges” (contradictions, inconsistencies, fallacies, and so on), i.e. completely asymmetric. Imagine linking clarity of human thinking to underlying sinusoidal geometry and topology. You could then achieve “correct thinking” simply by making your thoughts conform to optimal patterns. One of the greatest falsehoods in physics is that photons have zero mass. In fact, photons have zero net mass, which is an entirely different concept from photons having no mass at all. It’s the difference between existence and non-existence. Photons exist in the dimensionless, symmetrical, frequency domain of mind (the Singularity ... the orthogonal phase domain). “Broken” photons (i.e. spacetime particles) have non-zero net mass because they exist in the dimensional, asymmetric, spacetime domain of matter ... the non-orthogonal phase domain. Why does the Singularity have zero gravitational effect? – exactly because it has zero net mass. The world of gravity is the world of non-zero net mass, and, in the limit, this begins and ends with zero gravity (zero net mass) in the Singularity. Any viable theory of gravity must be able to analytically collapse non-zero net mass to zero net mass ... by switching from the spacetime domain to the frequency domain. Einstein’s theory of gravity is as bogus as the Copenhagen theory of quantum mechanics for exactly the same reason: both ignore an ontological frequency Singularity. Scientists cannot unify relativity theory and quantum mechanics. They would be able to do so in a trice if they got their ontology and epistemology right. You cannot unify these two theories except by basing both of them on a common frequency domain – defined by ontological mathematics – from which both theories then emerge as asymmetric (spacetime) features. Dark Matter All waves have mass. Dimensionless waves (in the Fourier frequency domain) have no net mass because of the symmetric mathematical properties of that domain. Dimensional waves (in the Fourier spacetime domain) have a net mass because of the asymmetric mathematical properties of that domain. Given that all things – both particles and space – are made of sinusoidal waves then this has the most astounding consequence: space itself has a mass. Dark matter – matter that cannot be seen and detected – is none other than the mass of space itself, uniformly spread out all over space, and getting steadily less dense as space expands. Moreover, everything that is true of space is also true of imaginary space (time). Time has an evenly distributed imaginary mass. All spatial particles with mass are integrated with temporal particles with imaginary mass. A particle comprises both aspects: spatial and temporal. Any valid theory of gravity must accommodate imaginary mass operating in conjunction with real mass.

Louis de Broglie famously wrote: $E = mc^2 = (mc)(c) = (p)(c)$ (since photonic momentum $p = mc$) $= (p)(f\lambda)$ (since $c = f\lambda$). Then, using $E = hf$, he wrote: $E = (h)(f) = (p)(f\lambda)$, from which he derived the expression: $h/p = \lambda$. De Broglie claimed that this relation was true not just for photons, but for electrons too, and, indeed, all particles – i.e. every particle has a wavelength – thus ushering in the age of wave-particle duality. However, note that $E = mc^2$ does not make energy dependent on frequency, while $E = hf$ emphatically does! Isn't this a fundamental inconsistency? So, how can the inconsistency be explained? We can write, $E = hf = mc^2 = m(f\lambda)^2$, and thus $m = h/((f)(\lambda^2))$. In other words, c may not be dependent on frequency (or, rather, c will stay c regardless of what frequency we are looking at), but m is dependent on f (and λ ; $m = h/(c\lambda)$), hence E is too.

Dissenters and heretics are suppressed. The existence of many silos – which do not act as a united community – means that there is no joined-up view, no big picture, no general understanding. Look at the Internet, at Facebook. The vast majority of Facebook groups are tiny silos. They almost never scale up. Hardly any rise to any prominence, and most of those that do are driven by celebrity culture, hence are vacuous. Sometimes, an issue can become very hot for a while, and Facebook is abuzz with it for a few days. But come back later and all of the fuss has died down. People can't sustain any commitment to anything. They quickly move on to the next fad, to whatever their friends are talking about. Everything's about popularity, fashion... even political causes are reduced to celebrity endorsements. The Internet causes activism to be broken up into a multitude of ineffectual micro-events. There's an incredible amount of hot air on the Internet. Almost none of it leads anywhere. Causes come and go on the Internet at a bewildering rate. Everything is about "flavour of the day" movements that vanish as quickly as they appear. People have no sacred causes. Most people on the Internet are other-directed, and follow wherever the crowd is going next. The crowd has no plan, no objectives. All it does is roam around, stopping for a moment or two at whatever catches its interest, before moving on to the next attraction. There is no end to this. It has no objective. It's just the flow of gossip and scandal.

Micro-activism is micro tokenism... it's gesture politics. Ties are weak between people on the Internet. For causes to succeed, they need strong ties between people that apply over many years. There are almost no long-standing, sacred causes on the Internet. The Internet encourages fragmentation, silos, pointless little groups, gangs and tribes. Nothing ever gains enough scale to challenge the powers-that-be, yet people delude themselves they are doing something important. The Internet is yet another brilliant invention by the elite to consolidate their power. It performs both of the elite's tried and tested formulas for success: it supports "divide and rule", and "bread and circuses." It breaks up humanity into countless little groups that will never unite.

If we say that all effects are emanations of their causes, hence less perfect than their causes, this automatically indicates that perfect things have no causes, i.e. they must be uncaused (uncreated). This was traditionally said of “God”, but it should have been said of the “God Equation”.

Any rational person who encounters AC/GS will readily embrace it. However, it will generate cognitive dissonance in irrationalists. They will then have to convert to rationalism, or seek to turn Illuminism into a farce and a joke. The trolls are those who take the latter route. They are too moronic to take the former path, the path of the Truth. No sane person would ever adopt a stance that opposes reason, logic and mathematics.

In order for any human word to become part of the Truth, it must be equated to a mathematical expression. If we say: the soul = $e^{ix} + \cos x + i \sin x$, we can then use the “soul” as an entity in mathematics and science. If we say, on the other hand, that the soul is “a miraculous creation of God, and is an object of faith” then we have removed the soul from any connection with the Truth.

Given that different individuals can experience and interpret the same event in different ways, if mathematical waves (objective form) carry the subjective content, this suggests that the content must be modulated by the individual's personal content.

The world is made of reason... reason, ontologically, is the form of the mathematical waves themselves. What we experience – i.e. the stuff of empiricism – is the content of mathematical waves... the information carried by the mathematical carriers. Every mathematical wave conveys two kinds of information: rational and empirical. The rational information relates to the mathematical form of the wave; the empirical information is the experiential content of the wave.

Empiricism is all about synthetic rather than analytic propositions, a posteriori knowledge rather than a priori knowledge. No innate ideas are acknowledged. The immense and insurmountable problem for empiricism is that it can never rise above subjective opinion, belief and speculation. As Nietzsche said, “There are no facts, only interpretations.” This is certainly true of all empirical “facts”. It’s impossible to prove the logical necessity of any experiential laws. There is no absolute, infallible Truth in empiricism, no absolute, incontestable knowledge. Any knowledge that isn’t certain isn’t knowledge at all. It’s opinion. Plato told us this thousands of years ago, yet, somehow, opinion is now regarded as “knowledge” while absolute Platonic Truth is regarded as abstract and unreal. The Truth has been inverted! Relativism has replaced absolutism; subjectivity has replaced objectivity. Only mathematics (rationalism) can cure this assault on the Truth. Mathematics restores the Platonic worldview to its rightful position. Mathematics is the antidote to science, the standard bearer of sensory empiricism. Rationalism states that knowledge comes from rational, logical deduction. It’s objective. It asserts that only innate ideas form a secure basis for knowledge, and these innate ideas reduce to mathematics, the quintessence of rationalism. Rationalism is about analytic propositions and a priori knowledge. It doesn’t need experiences at all, hence is the opposite of empiricism. No experiments are required, no observations. The objection here is that rationalism has an apparent problem linking its logical necessity to empirical reality.

There's a curious anomaly embedded in this explanation. The frequency domain, supposedly outside of space and time, represents a time-varying signal or waveform in terms of its frequency components. However, the notion of frequency is inextricably linked to the notion of time: the one is the inverse of the other. In physics terms, frequency is measured with respect to time - 1 hertz means one cycle per second. I don't see that the frequency domain precedes the spacetime domain - they are two sides of the same coin.

Abrahamism could be rendered sane overnight if monotheism were rejected, and bitheism – based on a female and male god – was introduced instead. Before the coming of Yahweh, “Jews” used to acknowledge the “God Couple”... El and Asherah. [“Asherah is identified as the consort of the Sumerian god Anu and Ugaritic El, the oldest deities of their respective pantheons.” – Wikipedia] In Illuminism, there is an asexual level above Satan (male) and Lucifer (female). This is Abraxas – pure rationality, pure Logos; neither male nor female. The highest God has no sex. Sometimes, Abrahamism asserts that the Abrahamic God has no sex, which is true in a strict technical sense in that he has no genitals (though Jesus Christ and all the Abrahamic prophets had penises, and none had vaginas!), but his behaviour is manifestly 100% masculine. Satan – masculinity – is pure Will to Power, and drives existence. So, “Satanism” (hence “evil”) is indispensable to evolution. But to counteract evil, Lucifer – femininity; goodness – is essential. The universe begins as fundamentally Satanic (all about brute masculine power), and this is the level Abrahamism has remained stuck at. It’s femininity that tames and civilises reptilian masculinity through empathy and sympathy (feelings). Abrahamism, to be made acceptable, needs to be feminised. Otherwise, it’s purely Satanic, hence unadulterated evil.

Illuminatus Ammonius Saccas taught Origen, the famous Christian theologian who advocated reincarnation! Ammonius Saccas, like Hypatia later, taught all sorts of people, with all sorts of backgrounds and beliefs. Teaching was his profession. He wasn't teaching them Gnostic Illuminism per se: he was teaching them the highest pagan philosophical ideas of the day (like a modern philosophy lecturer), and his students took from him whatever made most sense to them and to their psychological tastes.

Here are some of the things you cannot ontologically separate (even though you can intellectually): content and form, semantics and syntax, phenomenon and noumenon, territory and map, the information carried and the information carrier, physics and metaphysics, everything and math, empiricism and rationalism, matter and mind, subject and object (monads are eternal subject-objects), locality and non-locality (the wavefunction always has capacity for both), secondary and primary qualities. So much thinking goes wrong because of attempts to separate things that cannot be separated.

It’s critical to understand what the true monistic ontology of existence is, and to understand how it expresses itself in two distinct epistemologies. You mustn’t get these two epistemologies mixed up because it leads to fallacies and category errors. People – including some of the brightest people who have ever lived – keep applying their chosen epistemology (usually the empiricist epistemology) to areas where it has zero applicability (i.e. the rationalist world).

Real numbers correspond to space. Imaginary numbers correspond to time. Negative numbers correspond to "antimatter". The two most powerful numbers of all – and the ultimate basis of Illuminist thinking – are zero and infinity, which are absolutely harnessed together ontologically (opposite sides of the same coin, so to speak). The existence of zero and infinity is absolutely denied by the ideology of scientific materialism. In Pythagorean Illuminism, these two numbers not only exist, they are the "God" numbers: the origin of all other numbers. Zero and infinity comprise none other than the Big Bang Singularity from which the physical universe emerged. "Everything" literally came from "nothing", mathematically. Moreover, zero is also the "monad" of Leibniz. It is therefore the number of the soul, and it has infinite capacity. Being dimensionless – a mathematical point – the soul is mathematically outside the dimensional, material domain of space and time, hence the soul is indestructible and immortal.

There is no such thing as time in the way it's usually thought of. There's only eternal motion through the mathematical domain of imaginary and real space, the "complex" space. There's only the present moment. The future hasn't been actualized yet, and the past is gone. The "present" is wherever a moving point is currently located on its trajectory. What being outside of spacetime indicates is that you are always connected to everything presently being actualized instant by instant in spacetime, i.e. your mind is connected to everything that's happening in the physical universe. If it hasn't been actualized in spacetime, you won't be connected to it outside of spacetime because it hasn't happened. There is no "block time" in Illuminism. The mainstream interpretations of QM make outrageous claims that contradict reason and logic. Such as the claim that a particle can be in two places at once, in a "superposition" of states, and that particles travel as waves in between observations, and somehow magically turn into particles when we make measurements, but not otherwise. To take these bizarre claims seriously, you need to believe that the moon isn't there when no one's looking at it; you need to abandon the notion that there's an objective world that exists beyond our observations, and you need to accept that reality is grounded in randomness, acausality and ontological uncertainty.

Education gives you words. Those with words are those with thoughts. Your intelligence is in direct correlation to your level of consciousness. This is why education needs to be revamped to be the core of society. Society is just “follow the leader”. The primary stage of a child’s social development (Ego) occurs while in primary school. We need to do everything in our power to ensure the education system revolves around every child’s unique and individual needs. A Meritocracy places education at the centre of society, and guarantees equal opportunities for every child. Education is the catalyst that allows consciousness to grow and develop. With education, one subjective being can “share” his knowledge and assist in another subject’s evolution. The path of every monad is to turn its infinite potential into infinite actuality, to fulfill the sacred task of alchemy and turn base metal into gold. Words contain power. Words assist in the transfer of power from author to reader. By reading words you think, by thinking you gain knowledge. Knowledge is power, so words hold the ability to increase your power. We need no prophets, no holy texts, just the varying expressions of mathematical thought formed within mathematical subjects.

There is a big difference between gaining information and knowledge from a book versus gaining understanding. People who copy and paste the God Series, for example, have only gained information. Original thought and active implementation exemplifies that the reader gained an understanding. The God Series is a call to action written for intelligent minds. There are four main questions an enlightened reader must ask and be able to answer at all times. Many people come to the God Series and they cannot centralize the theme. That is because they have read for information. This is mainly done by feeling types. Poor readers most of the time, dominant feeling types have no rational and analytical side to them. The God Series also covers a wide range of topics. Read these four questions and start to see how this type of reading can transcend your understanding. 1. What is the central point of the book in its entirety? How is the author constructing this central point throughout the book as the main point unfolds? How are the authors' different subdividing themes contributing to the central point? 2. What are the authors saying, and how are they saying it? You might have to do some digging, but what are the authors' main arguments, supporting details, thoughts and so forth? How are these ideas contributing back to the central point? 3. Do you think the book is true or not? You cannot answer this question based primarily off obtained information; you must have gained a full understanding before you may answer this question. 4. If the book is true, now what? Why do the authors think this information is vital? Why do the authors say certain things, and expect certain action from you? If you gained a full understanding of the book, you now must ask yourself, what is next? What are the implications, and what are the next moves? ... a complete full understanding of the book, and, if the authors did their job in communicating, then the reader should have a 100% certain set of actions to be implemented. If the after-fact of a book is uncertainty, you have read for information purposes and should go back and reread the entire God Series before it's too late!!!

The Troll Diaries—My Notes & Clippings

The Euler unit circle reflects positive and negative, real and imaginary, in perfect balance, producing a mathematical singularity. From this unit circle, by extending the complex plane to a point at infinity, we can construct the Riemann Sphere. From the Euler unit circle, we can mathematically and analytically derive Einstein's theory of special relativity, and, ultimately, the theory of general relativity too (although this is much more complex). Likewise, it can generate the whole of quantum mechanics via ontological Fourier mathematics. All of these properties make it the base of everything. The roots of Illuminism lie in a wondering group of mystics, some of whom arrived at the door of Israel's most famous king: Solomon. One of the men eventually succeeded in enlightening him, convincing Solomon that he was being tricked by Rex Mundi, the king of the world, into doing his evil bidding. It is said that Solomon died an apostate, attempting to stop the Jewish worship of Jehovah, and make them worship Wisdom (Sophia) instead. Solomon must be recognized as the first unofficial grandmaster of the Illuminati. However, in those times, people were basing their opinions on subjective intuitions and feelings, now commonly known as mythology and Mythos. By the time of Pythagoras, the great Greek mathematician, the Illuminati were formulating a logical interpretation of reality (Logos). Ontologically, you can't separate syntax and semantics any more than you can separate sign and signified, form and content. They are two linked aspects of the same system: the opposite sides of the same coin. As for calculus, so much is wrongly stated about it because mathematicians don't treat it in the ontological manner intended by Leibniz, its inventor. Calculus must be understood to begin and end with immaterial, dimensionless, mental monads! Calculus is an ontological, not an abstract process.

In fact, we know for certain that any axioms that cannot be shown to have a common origin cannot be consistent! If mathematicians started using the principle of sufficient reason as the basis of the entirety of valid mathematics, all of the problems of foundational mathematics would dissolve. Why are mathematicians so reluctant to ontologically ground their subject? – only because they have been brainwashed by the whole of cultural history to see mathematics as an unreal abstraction, to which unreal, abstract rules apply. The irony is that the first recognisable mathematician – Pythagoras – was also the first ontological mathematician

Some people are in jobs where the Truth Bias is inverted, and they operate according to the so-called “Lie Bias”. Police and social workers, for example, are basically trained to assume that everything being said to them is a lie ... unless proven otherwise. With the Truth Bias, people are innocent until proven guilty. With the Lie Bias, people are guilty until proven innocent. They are liars until proven truthful! Thus, people such as the police are not the most popular people. The question arises as to whether they can switch off their Lie Bias when they are off duty, relaxing at home with their loved ones.

Mathematics, as handled within rationalism, is purely syntactical. It’s all about form. However, we can also address the information, the content carried ontologically by mathematics, and this takes us to empiricism and semantics. Our semantic system will not be arbitrary if we tie it to necessary mathematical syntax. If not, it will indeed be arbitrary.

Science is laughable because it talks of a grand unified, final theory of everything, which would correspond to a necessary syntax and necessary semantics. However, it then invokes falsification and verification principles, which, when applied to any “final” theory, mean that it will always be falsifiable (hence untrue because Truth cannot be falsified), and will always be in need of verification, i.e. it will not have a definitive syntax, hence will not be a final theory at all!

The universe begins at the Big Bang in, we might say, a state of maximum form and minimum content (in the sense that although the monadic minds that make up the universe are having all manner of experiences, these are all happening unconsciously; no sense is made of anything ... meaning is not being applied). It’s all syntax and no semantics. As consciousness evolves, conscious minds start applying meaning to everything, but they can and usually do get meaning entirely wrong – hence all of the absurd beliefs held in the world today.

You cannot link words to “the unmediated expression of something non-linguistic”: to an emotion, sense datum, physical object, idea or Platonic Form. You can, however, link numbers to exactly these! Every number is, ontologically, an energy wave (sinusoid), and every wave carries information (content, meaning, experience). By combining numbers (waves), we can create an infinite number of different experiences. We can think in terms of “atomic experiences” that we combine in various ways to form molecular experiences. The atomic experiences are eternally and necessarily fixed, but the molecular experiences are temporal and contingent. The atomic experiences are akin to the notes of a piano. The molecular experiences are like the music we play with those notes.

“Semantics contrasts with syntax, the study of the combinatorics of units of a language (without reference to their meaning), and pragmatics, the study of the relationships between the symbols of a language, their meaning, and the users of the language. Semantics as a field of study also has significant ties to various representational theories of meaning including truth theories of meaning, coherence theories of meaning, and correspondence theories of meaning. Each of these is related to the general philosophical study of reality and the representation of meaning.” – Wikipedia

Syntactically, math is everything to do with form. Semantically, math is everything to do with content. Syntax provides the material for rationalism, semantics the material for empiricism. The great war between rationalism and empiricism is simply a confusion between syntax and semantics. It's a category error to apply rationalist syntax to empirical semantics, and a category error to apply empirical semantics to rationalist syntax. Causation is syntactic not semantic. Since causation cannot be perceived semantically, David Hume denied its existence. In fact, what Hume was denying was the existence of all-natural syntax. For him, all that existed was a continuous stream of semantics ("consciousness"). Abstract mathematics – pure rationalism – is the opposite of Hume's empiricism. Where Hume denied syntax, abstract mathematics denies semantics. Ontological mathematics brings syntax and semantics together as the necessary, opposite sides of the same coin in a dual-aspect monism. Science is that which, like Hume, accepts an empirical semantics, but, unlike Hume, is willing to underpin this empirical semantics with an "unreal", "abstract", rationalist mathematical syntax. In ontological mathematics, this syntax is real rather than unreal, hence science, in this view, becomes based on mathematical syntax (rather than semantics deriving from interpretations of sensory experiments).

Socrates' star pupil was Plato, a man obsessed with establishing an absolute Truth that we can know infallibly. Thus his famous theory of eternal, immutable Forms. The only thing Plato got wrong is that eternal, immutable Forms can apply to only one thing – mathematics. Pythagoras understood this, but Plato didn't. Only numbers – the language of nature – can be Forms. Manmade words can never be Forms. There's no Form of Justice, of Happiness, of Human Beauty, Morality, or whatever ... these are all subjective views, opinions, beliefs, conjectures, speculations and interpretations. Plato's Forms should be all about syntax. His error was to try to create semantic Forms, such as Beauty, Justice, and the Good.

Why is it that mind can control matter? How can you make your arm rise just by thinking it, willing it? It's because matter is made of mathematical waves, and so is mind. By thinking about controlling matter at the semantic level, you are ipso facto initiating real mathematical operations at the syntactic level, and these can interact with matter at the syntactic level and have real mathematical effects on matter. This is why – when you become "God" – you can literally control the universe just by semantically thinking about it. If the finite is the thesis, and the infinite the antithesis, the dialectical synthesis is the "finite-infinity" – which is what reality is actually all about.

The Troll Diaries—My Notes & Clippings

There is no such thing as the strictly finite, and no such thing as the strictly infinite. The finite and infinite have no existence independent of each other. As Hegel wrote: “The finite and the infinite are a single unity.” He completely rejected the idea that the infinite should be considered as something separate from the finite. Any argument that attempts to divorce the infinite from the finite is ipso facto false ... a fundamental error in logic has occurred. There are no uncontained infinities, i.e. infinities that cannot be understood via finitary means. The circle is a perfect example. We can travel round a circle forever, but it is a fully contained, analytic, finite entity.

Motion is essential to the principle of continuity, and thus infinity. Any discussion of infinity that does not take into account the principle of continuity and motion is invalid. There is no such thing as “static” infinity, just as there are no such things as static points. All points are expressed through motion, hence are energy systems. Energy is motion. Infinity is a motion concept, a continuity concept: it can never be understood statically or discontinuously. Infinity is ontological – concerned with real processes. It is not abstract. Turning to Leibniz’s law of continuity, Wikipedia says, “The Law of Continuity is a heuristic principle introduced by Gottfried Leibniz based on earlier work by Nicholas of Cusa and Johannes Kepler. It is the principle that ‘whatever succeeds for the finite, also succeeds for the infinite’.

The number line should be regarded not so much as an infinity of different numbers, but as a myriad of locational resettings of the origin thanks to motion. In the latter view, there is only one point – the origin – and motion allows us to continuously relocate it. It is this constant relocation of the origin that creates the illusion of different numbers. In fact, they are never anything but zero in a different position, brought about by motion. Such a notion wipes out the whole set theory understanding of what numbers are. All that exists are points and their relations to each other in a system of motion. A moving point, because it is always relocating the origin, ipso facto has a tiny dimensionality, and it is this tiny dimensionality that is the basis of what we call the “finite”.

Motion renders all numbers “continuum” entities, which can only be understood and handled as a range, not as discrete entities. The whole idea of a smallest non-zero number (a “first number”) is absurd. The whole concept of well-ordering is absurd. Such ideas are artefacts of set theory. They have no connection to dynamic ontology. Set theorists think about numbers in entirely the wrong way. They see them as rather like standalone, isolatable Platonic Forms. It must be understood that all monads sit right on top of each other in the Singularity. The best way for getting a handle on what a monad is like is by analogy with a self-playing piano, listening to its own compositions, learning from them and making them better and better, until it produces the most sublime of symphonies. The notes of the monadic piano are sine and cosine waves of every possible frequency and type. We have a full set of positive, real sines and cosines; negative, real sines and cosines; positive, imaginary sines and cosines; and negative, imaginary sines and cosines. No possibility is absent with regard to sines, cosines and their phase relations. The monadic piano is a natural, ontological explorer, investigator and player of Fourier mathematics. It starts hitting this note and that note, thus creating contingent compositions from its necessary notes, and it experiences what it produces as either good or bad, pleasurable or painful. It quickly dispenses with bad, painful tunes, and keeps only the good, pleasurable tunes, which it keeps trying to improve. Fourier mathematics is the essence of monads. The keys of the monadic piano are the eternal, necessary basis waves of Fourier mathematics, which can be combined in any way to produce Fourier functions. There is nothing complicated about this system. The sinusoids are the analytic, indivisible “atoms” of the system, and their combinations are the “molecules” produced by the system. That’s it. There’s nothing else going on. Leibniz demanded that the best possible world should be the simplest in hypothesis and the richest in phenomena. That’s exactly what ontological Fourier mathematics delivers. Monads spontaneously perform Fourier mathematics because that’s exactly what they are: agents of Fourier mathematics. They perform Fourier mathematics entirely naturally at all times. They don’t need any help.

It's certainly valid to argue that the monad learns to produce core functions – Jungian Archetypes we might say – to which it returns over and over again to perform all sorts of repeated, useful, basic tasks. In other words, from its basis sinusoidal code, it produces subprograms and subroutines, and it's at this level – of useful functions – that the monad operates, rather than always going right back to the basis sinusoids. Like a computer programmer, the monad builds all complex programs from subprograms, of which it has created a library. In terms of the Monadic Collective, these subprograms are none other than the Jungian Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious, to which we all have access, and which we can modify for our individual purposes.

divorce his thinking from his sensory perceptions). Nothing can be unknown or unknowable in a universe defined by, and made of, a complete and consistent, eternal and necessary language (i.e. ontological mathematics, the language of energy, of existence itself).

Ha ha! AI has come on leaps and bounds since this book was written. AI researchers have indeed connected two AI systems together and these systems did indeed evolve their own language. The troubling thing was that the researchers couldn't figure out what the AIs were saying to each other!

If language – a socially agreed form of communication – is the basis of human consciousness then to even attempt to make machines “conscious” would require a group of machines to interact with each other and produce between them their own agreed language. Good luck to the programmers who could make machines do that!

The only way to escape this manifest absurdity is for reality itself to be a language, hence inherently intelligible. It obviously cannot be a manmade language, and the only language that is not manmade is ontological mathematics.

“With the perfect instrument ready, the divine composer played on it for many eons while he rehearsed for the performance at the End of Time. “And then came the supreme moment of existence – the Divine Performance culminating in the Divine Suicide...when the last note sounds as God perishes. “The Last Symphony begins with Wagner’s Tristan Chord – the greatest musical innovation in history; a chord that is never resolved – an expression of a longing that is never satisfied. “The symphony is majestic, note-perfect, infinitely emotive. It bears all of the soulfulness of existence, of the whole of history. Every sadness, joy, hope, dream, desire is expressed in this music. “All the tears shed in eternity are reflected here. Love, yearning, longing, hatred, destruction, good, evil... all of the contents of the dialectical unfolding of the cosmos are captured. “To listen to this music is to experience every emotion imaginable, to have an infinite number of epiphanies, to achieve Absolute Gnosis – knowledge of all things. But this is the Götterdämmerung, “the Doom of the Gods”, their Dusk, the Divine Twilight. As the symphony of existence nears its end, the notes start to explode, to turn to aural fire. They set the whole cosmos ablaze. “The universe is dying in flames, in the supreme, terminal, cosmic conflagration. And, at the very last, God sings out one perfect note – the note of absolute destruction, of total cataclysm and apocalypse, the Armageddon Note. This is the unique note of The End, that brings the life of God to its perfect conclusion at the end of the perfect performance of the Music of the Spheres. “How much would you pay to hear that performance? Is that not the meaning of life? To enjoy just one instant of infinite perfection? “Music, mathematics, emotion, Will, logic, love, and the cosmic dialectic – that’s the story of existence, and what a story.” – Mike Hockney

God Nature: Logos Consciousness, based on numbers. At one with the syntax and semantics of Nature, of the universe. With this consciousness, you can directly and immediately control matter with your mind. You are no longer mediating reality through artificial words. The barriers between you and reality have dissolved. You have made direct contact with reality.

The human condition is imperfect and mortal. The divine condition is perfect and immortal. Only by transcending our humanity can we link to our divinity. You cannot access divinity through prayer, meditation, faith, or anything human. Reason and logic are our instruments of the divine. They lead us to divine knowledge and divine understanding. They are the basis of Gnosticism. They are the routes to gnosis. Gnosis is, above all, an ontological and epistemological state, corresponding to coming into perfect possession of Nature’s perfect language (mathematics), thus making you perfect too, hence converting you into God. You understand everything. You are at one with reality.

When you understand what we have said here, you will understand that this one equation allows us to understand everything, hence it’s the authentic God Equation. A necessary task of the universe is to produce a species that can understand the God Equation. Through this species, the universe comes to a conscious understanding of itself. Moreover, this species – the God Species – is required to solve the equation. The final phase of the universe is driven by the conscious plan of the God Species to produce universal perfection (heaven), via perfect mathematical symmetry.

There is no greater insight than that the arche – the fundamental substance of existence (i.e. energy) – must also be the fundamental language of existence (i.e. mathematics). Only if this is true can existence be intelligible.

You cannot understand reality if you do not grasp that substance = language; ontology = language; epistemology = language; physics = language; metaphysics = language; mind = language; matter = language; life = language; light = language. They all equal the same language ... mathematics! And thus it is possible to understand everything!
